

I'm not robot!

score:73 Accepted answer You're looking for the DataSource property: List someList = ...; myListBox.DataSource = someList; You should also set the DisplayMember property to the name of a property in the object that you want the listbox to display. If you don't, it will call ToString(). score:1 For a UWP app: XAML C# public ObservableCollection Results score:2 There are two main routes here: 1: listBox1.DataSource = yourList; Do any manipulation (Add/Delete) to yourList and Rebind. Set DisplayMember and ValueMember to control what is shown. 2: listBox1.Items.AddRange(yourList.ToArray()); (or use a for-loop to do Items.Add(...)) You can control Display by overloading ToString() of the list objects or by implementing the listBox1.Format event. score:3 I haven't seen it here so I post it because for me it is the best way in winforms: List objList = new List(); listBox.DataSource = objList; listBox.Refresh(); listBox.Update(); score:4 listBox1.DataSource = CreateDataSource(); listBox1.DataTextField = "FieldProperty"; listBox1.DataValueField = "ValueProperty"; Please refer to this article for detailed examples. score:6 Granted, this isn't going to provide you anything truly meaningful unless the objects have properly overridden ToString() (or you're not really working with a generic list of objects and can bind to specific fields): List objList = new List(); // Fill the list someListBox.DataSource = objList; score:17 Pretending you are displaying a list of customer objects with "customerName" and "customerId" properties: listBox.DataSource = customerListObject; listBox.DataTextField = "customerName"; listBox.DataValueField = "customerId"; listBox.DataBind(); Edit: I know this works in asp.net - if you are doing a winforms app, it should be pretty similar (I hope...). score:18 Binding a System.Windows.Forms.ListBox Control to a list of objects (here of type dynamic) List dynList = new List() { new { Id = 1, Name = "Elevator", Company="Vertical Pop" }, new { Id = 2, Name = "Stairs", Company="Fitness" } }; listBox.DataSource = dynList; listBox.DisplayMember = "Name"; listBox.ValueMember = "Id"; Source: stackoverflow.com Related Query More Query from same tag When dealing with GUI, usually we will use the MVC pattern, which means we manage a set of data as Model, the model will be demonstrated as View and the Controller controls the logic of showing the data: The main problem of this pattern is that most of the controller's works are simple "get" and "set" functions between the data and the gui Like: //Copy data to gui for(int i=0;
